* Luck in Life ***

Do you believe in the beneficial influence of Lucky Charms? If so, you are only doing what others have done before you, right through the ages. Many who profess themselves superior to what they are pleased to call 'Superstition' secretly carry some little token which, although they admit it to only themselves, they would be reluctant to lose for fear it should bring the bad luck.

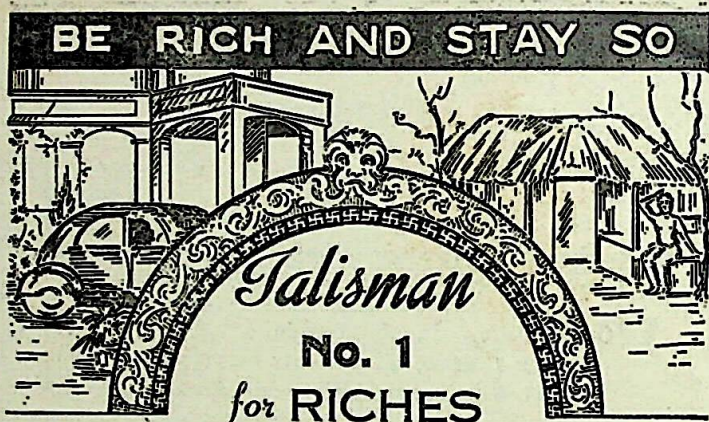

So many authentic cases have been recorded where charms have brought good fortune that the question can no longer be treated with derision, but it is necessary for the wearer to have faith as well.

The following Talismans were in constant demand during the last quarter of a century of my active practice, and have won world wide reputation for their alleged miraculous power to bring about the desired result quickly, easily & early.

People in every grade of Society, from the highest down-to-day rely upon them to bring them success in life and love, in financial affairs and the recovery from illness. All who wish to ensure themselves the good things life holds should possess the magical charms. It will help you in moments of difficulty, giving you strength, courage and conviction- It embodies all that is good. Wear it, have faith in it and it will help you in your hour of tribulation. Rely upon them in competitions, profession and finance to bring you success in personal, social and love affairs.

THE EVIL EYE

The superstition of the "Evil Eye" is found among people of any nationality, of every religion, of every degree, of education and of any tint of skin. It is steeped in tradition, legend and folk lore. The Evil Eye influence can come from the Rich and the poor, the high and the low, the good and the bad. The Adharvaveda describes all the formulæ and magical rites to avert the consequences of mishaps of various kinds including the Evil Eye.

My personal interpretation of the Evil Eye is that it is not the glance, but the Evil is in the thoughts behind the glance, generally an envious thought. Let us suppose that a man owns a fine Cow, giving plenty of milk. A neighbour looks at it when it is milked. He wishes that he had such a fine cow and looks longingly at the milk. The result is that from the next day the cow gives less milk, dries up, or gets sick. This is a popular instance of the Evil Eye on an animal.

So the Evil Eye may be interpreted more broadly as a hidden thought in the mind. But you cannot control the thoughts of others or tell them "NOT" to think Evil of you. If you cannot control another's thoughts, then a method must be devised to render these thoughts harmless or neutralised. This psychological device is much the same as if you wear a bullet-proof vest. It would not stop a person from shooting at you but would render the bullet harmless. In the same way certain amulets, rituals, customs and traditions have been handed down for countless generations to overcome the Evil Eye.

Children are particularly susceptible to the Evil Eye. Parents are constantly trying to circumvent the Evil glances of strangers by wearing amulets made of Elephant's hair or Tiger's Claws on the necks of their children. In Sanscrit this Evil Glance is called "DRISHTI"

Gardeners refuse admittance to curious on-lookers to guard against possibility of Evil Eye which might cause Blossoms to wither and trees to dry. Strange effigies are propped up on the way-side fields amongst rich crops to neutralise, the Evil Eye of passers-by.

Old shoes, cocoanut and some kind of fruit are hung in front of new built houses as protection against Evil Eyes of neighbours. Food is always covered and protected from Evil Eyes of others.

Thus people are not the only objects that fall victim to the influence of the Evil Eye. Animals are protected from evil in many ways. Buildings are protected. Rituals of various kinds are followed to protect fruit-bearing trees and standing crops. The harvested grain in the granary is also protected from this destroying influence.

If you want to avert, neutralise or eliminate the Evil Eye, here are a few items from which you can select those that are suited for your individual purpose.
